

CONTRIBUTORS/COLLABORATEURS

Donna Andrew teaches English history at the University of Guelph and has published a number of articles in eighteenth-century social history.

Elizabeth Bloomfield is an urban historian in Guelph whose work has appeared in the Urban History Review.

Bettina Bradbury teaches Canadian history at the Université de Montréal. She is the author of a number of important articles on the family economy of the Montreal working class.

W.J.C. Cherwinski is a member of the Memorial University of Newfoundland history department. He is currently working on the history of agricultural labour in Canada.

Jacques Ferland teaches history at the University of Maine at Orono and recently completed his PhD thesis at McGill.

Alice Kessler-Harris, a prominent historian of American women, teaches at Hofstra College in New York.

Glen Makahonuk works as an archivist in Saskatchewan and has published a number of articles on that province's workers.

Susan Curtis Mernitz teaches history at Florida International University in Miami.

David Montgomery of Yale University's department of history is one of America's most distinguished historians of the working class.

Bruno Ramirez of the Université de Montréal is a member of Labour/Le Travail's editorial board and has published prolifically in the area of labour and immigration history.

Nicholas Rogers of York University is a specialist in eighteenth-century English social history who has recently turned his attention to Canadian social history.