

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

J. Peter Campbell works as a research assistant with the Disraeli Project at Queen's University. South Asian militants in British Columbia are now the subject of his on-going exploration of the advocates of revolutionary transformation in Canadian history.

Cynthia Comacchio, History, Wilfrid Laurier University, is the author of "Nations Are Built of Babies": Saving Ontario's Mothers and Children, 1900-40 (McGill-Queen's 1993). She is currently working on a [mostly unrelated] project on adolescence, industrial hygiene and proletarian culture.

Marc Epprecht is a research fellow with the south-South Exchange Program for Studies in the History of Development (SEPHIS) who has been based in Zimbabwe for the past three years. His book on the history of gender, development and politics in colonial Lesotho is forthcoming.

Hugh Grant is a member of the Economics Department at the University of Winnipeg.

Susanne Klausen is a doctoral candidate in the Department of History, Queen's University at Kingston. She is currently writing her dissertation on the history of the South African birth control movement, 1930-1965.

Rob Kristofferson is a doctoral candidate in the Department of History, York University. His thesis examines masculinity and class formation in Hamilton, 1840-1872.

Belinda Leach is a social anthropologist in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Guelph.

Jean Lamarre est actuellement professeur-adjoint au Collège militaire royal de Kingston. Titulaire d'un doctorat en histoire des États-Unis de l'Université de Montréal, il a enseigné dans plusieurs universités canadiennes.

John Manley teaches American and Canadian History at the University of Central Lancashire, Preston, England.

Robert Sweeny, a historian, lives with Elizabeth-Anne Malischewski and their daughter Charlotte in St. John's, Newfoundland.