Proletarian Cromwell: Two Found Poems Offer Insights into One of Canada’s Long-Forgotten Communist Labour Leaders

Ron Verzuh

The saga of my life among the mass.
To the whole working class it should belong,
Immortalised in proletarian song.

Harvey Murphy, the putative author of those boastful lines, once quipped that he was the “reddest rose in the garden of labour” and for some, though far from all, Canadian labour movement veterans of the 1930s and 1940s, this was an apt description of one of the most mercurial yet almost forgotten Communist labour leaders of the 20th century.1 Alas, Murphy was no poetaster.2 Instead, the authorship of the above lines, excerpted from one of two pseudo-biographical poems, belongs to Murphy’s elder contemporary, the lifelong left-wing firebrand “Red Malcolm” Bruce.3 Indeed, Bruce, a founding member of the Communist Party of Canada (cpc), penned some seemingly bitter criticisms of his youthful Red comrade. Then again, it could be argued that they were written in jest, that the poems were not so much an upbraiding as a jocular remembrance. As shall be shown, there is much in the poetry that could lead to such an interpretation, but evidence presented here also hints at some more serious personal and political motives for writing the verses.

2. A poetaster is an amateur poet.
As historian Stephen L. Endicott notes, Murphy “was blessed with a confident, good opinion of himself and an ironic tongue,” a perfect candidate for the Bruce lampooning in the mimicked voice of a man who would become “one of the most popular speakers for a generation of the radical left in Canada.” Endicott published short excerpts from the poems in 2012, adding his comments. However, as indicated here they merit publication in their entirety accompanied by a broader explanation of their existence. Not only do they offer a rare insider’s view of the cataclysmic early years of the CPC, but also they offer insights into the labour and political events that occurred in the late 1920s and early 1930s. The poems highlight the “Wilde” activities that brought

4. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 111.
Murphy to the full attention of party leaders like Bruce but also the squads of police spies who would secretly report on both men for the next five decades.

At the time the poems were written in 1932, much was about to unfold in the Communist world of the reddest rose and his Byronic biographer as the Great Depression momentarily shifted the public’s mind to the possibility that Communism offered a way forward. Promoting that possibility were Bruce and seven other leaders of the CPC, including party general secretary Tim Buck. But in August 1931, they were arrested and by February 1932 they were serving five-year sentences in Kingston Penitentiary for sedition under Section 98 of the Canadian Criminal Code.5 While in jail, Bruce set down his thoughts about Murphy in a long sarcastic poem entitled Wilde Harvie’s Pilgrimage and a second shorter poem, Irish Chiefs and Scotch Traducers, apparently meant to serve as Murphy’s fictional rebuttal. Typewritten manuscripts of the Bruce poems have been available for decades in university archives, in this case within the fonds of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers (IUMMSW), but seem to have gone largely unnoticed and possibly dismissed. Aside from Endicott’s effort to lift them from obscurity, historians do not appear to have seen the value of analyzing the poems and yet, as argued here, they help to illuminate the personalities of various CPC stalwarts associated with Murphy while also exposing the acerbic and at times caustic wit of the poems’ radical author.

The unsigned poems (the author is identified only by a handwritten note) join a legacy of political poetry that flourished in the 1930s in both the United States and Canada. Canadian historian James Doyle, in his analysis of radical literature during that period, cites the political verse of Communists like Dorothy Livesay, Dawn Fraser, and Joe Wallace who frequently published in The Worker, edited by Bruce in the 1920s, and playwrights like Oscar Ryan who would co-author the play Eight Men Speak with its focus on the arrest and imprisonment of Bruce and the other Communist leaders. The Bruce poems were on the outer edge of that movement to create a radical proletarian literature in Canada and, though Bruce was perhaps an unwitting precursor, his prison jottings featured some of the bristling personal acrimony, political infighting, and cutting humour that were to characterize CPC relationships and the ideologically charged poetry to come.

As Endicott has noted, the longer poem, subtitled “An Alleged Autobiography of Harvey Murphy,” “lampooned Murphy’s restless personality.” The shorter poem, “An Alleged Reply by Murph,” points to some tensions among the jailed CPC leaders, but also suggests that the incarcerated men shared a sense of humour albeit at Murphy’s expense. Both poems offer insights into left politics in Canada and capture some sense of the turbulent life led by these two party operatives, both often on the run from the authorities, sometimes adopting protective pseudonyms, and often risking jail sentences for their efforts to support the Communist cause. The full text of the Bruce poems provides a

6. Typescripts of poems were found in the IUMMSW fonds (boxes 68–84), University of British Columbia, Main Library, Rare Books and Special Collections, Vancouver.

8. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 111.

9. For one view of Murphy’s capacity to criticize CPC policies but also act bureaucratically to implement them, see Jack Scott, A Communist Life: Jack Scott and the Canadian Workers Movement, 1927–1985, ed. Bryan D. Palmer (St. John’s: Canadian Committee on Labour History, 1988).
sense of that life, revealing some possible hidden meanings, cryptic political comments, and insights into Murphy’s work as a Communist organizer. The annotated text of the poems is followed by brief biographies of Murphy and Bruce, a comparison of Bruce’s style to the original works by Lord Byron, further discussion about why the poems were written, and about the political context within which Bruce and Murphy worked.
Bruce copied the style of Romantic poet Lord Byron.

Wilde Harvie’s Pilgrimage

“Pigmies are pigmies still though perched on Alps and pyramids are pyramids in vales.”
– Edward Young (1681–1765)10

Introduction

Now that my fame has uninvited spread
Until my very name inspires dread
In Bosses’ hearts, and my renown has grown
Until o’er all the earth my feats are known,
There comes from every land beneath the skies

10. Edward Young was an English poet best known for Night Thoughts, the long poem in blank verse from which Bruce quotes above. First published in 1742, it later gained renewed prominence when it appeared in a 1797 edition with illustrations by William Blake. Presumably Bruce took the quote out of context as a double jab at Murphy. Interestingly, M. Seivewright, “Malcolm Bruce” (unpublished manuscript, likely dated 1931 or 1932), 4, author’s copy, called Bruce “a giant among pigmies.”
Requests for detailed story of my rise.
The comrades point to all of value gained
From lives of Marx and Lenin – all the famed
In Labor’s struggles to shake off the gyves,11
And urge I place my tale in the archives.
As rare Ben Jonson said so long ago12
Of Avon’s peerless poet, in his woe,
“He was not of an age but for all time”
So I to many urgings must incline
And place on deathless pages for my class
The saga of my life among the mass.
To the whole working class it should belong,
Immortalised in proletarian song.
My innate modesty restrains my pen –
I lay it down, and take it up again,
At last resolved to give posterity
The benefit of my activity
Among the workers so that it will be
An inspiration and a light to see
The path from obscure state to Fame’s bright glare,
So all who have the will may gain a share.

Canto the First

Like many of the great and lowly sung
I sprang from lowly stock and nether rung13
Of social ladder, and my early youth
Was spent within the “Ward” with the uncouth.14
My wits were sharp, I managed to get on Without much toiling, and when called upon
At times to take the money down to pay
The light and water bills I fell away
From grace by not depositing the “jack”,15
But spent it and forgot to pay it back.
Time after time they chased me out of home

11. Gyves are shackles or fetters.
12. Ben Jonson, the 17th-century British playwright and poet, was known for his satirical writings.
13. Rolf Knight, Rolf Knight Papers, Harvey Murphy transcripts (file 8-2), University of British Columbia Main Library, Rare Books and Special Collections, Vancouver, includes a short family history by Maryann Hiebert (Murphy’s daughter), indicating that Murphy’s parents were poor Polish-Jewish immigrants. His father worked as a Kosher butcher in Toronto’s Kensington Market area. His mother was an illiterate cook and domestic worker before coming to Canada. See also Rolf Knight, “Harvey Murphy: Reminiscences 1918–1943,” rolfknife.ca, 1976, http://rolfknight.ca/HARVEY-MURPHY.pdf.
15. Jack was a common term for money in the 1930s.
And left me with the “Mission Stiffs” to roam;\(^{16}\)
And I was made an Ishmael many a time
For drinking my old man’s Yum Kipper wine.\(^{17}\)
I chanced into the orbit of class strife
But little knowing I’d devote my life
To leading great class battles, gaining fame
Which made all tyrants tremble at my name.
And little did Canuck, Uke, Yid or Finn\(^{18}\)
Suspect the towering genius smouldering in
The callow youth, high talented but green,
Who hung around the place at Five-Nineteen.\(^{19}\)
Fond memories cluster ’round that hallowed spot –
The maidens toward me neither cold nor hot,
Like phantoms now they flit before my eyes,
Angels who strayed a space from Paradise –
The Ausprich girls, and others plump enough,
The Rosen girls and Fanny Kornlikoff.\(^{20}\)
Round Moriarty’s flame like moths they’d swarm,\(^{21}\)
He too respectable to do them harm.
The campaign Drury,\(^{22}\) sprung in ’Twenty-Three
Gave latent gifts their chance, they called on me
To act as chairman, I performed with vim,
With Johnny Knight I gathered voters in\(^{23}\)

---

16. “Mission Stiffs” were down-and-out men who stayed in houses supplied by religious or charitable missions.

17. Yom Kippur or the Day of Atonement is one of two Jewish high holy days (the other being Rosh Hashanah), a time to make peace with others and with God. According to Jewish tradition, Yom Kippur is also the day when God decides the fate of each human being. It is misspelled here possibly meant to add to the sarcasm that runs through the poem.

18. Slang references for Canadian, Ukrainian, Jewish, and Finnish immigrants.

19. The CPC was headquartered at 519 Queen Street West in Toronto.

20. I was unable to find any reference to these women; however, according to Allen Seager, “A History of the Mine Workers’ Union of Canada, 1925–1936,” MA Thesis, McGill University, 1977, 137, “There were two women worthy of note in the revolutionary movement in Blairmore: Anna Apponen, a Finn whom Murphy described as “the best female revolutionist in the Party”; and Mary North, who founded the Women’s Labour League (an affiliate of the W.U.L.) in the town in 1930.”

21. William Moriarty was secretary of the Workers’ Party of Canada (wpc).

22. Ernest Charles Drury led the United Farmers of Ontario-Labour Coalition to victory in 1919 and served as the province’s eighth premier until 1923. Drury was associated with the temperance movement, an issue in the 1923 election.

23. Johnny Knight might be a reference to Bill Knight, the coal miner who was elected mayor of Blairmore, Alberta, in February 1932, but could also refer to Joseph R. Knight, an organizer for the One Big Union in Ontario and a Communist sympathizer. According to www.socialistshistory.ca, Joseph Knight addressed the Third Congress of the Communist International (Comintern) and the founding congress of the Red International Labour Union (RILU or Profintern) in July 1921. William Rodney, Soldiers of the International: A History of the Communist Party of Canada 1919–1929 (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1968), 166.
To where from soapbox tribune they could hear
MacCausland cursed for snaring votes with beer.25

Full oft I’d heard the mournful changes rung
Of hardships suffered ere the obscure sprung
To prominence; I, too, endured my share
As Marx the giant did on beggar’s fare –
Soho’s slum lodgings for his brood and him,
And Number Two, Gerrard,26 for me and Slim.27
On bed of Telegrams and Globes and Mails,
Far harder than a felon finds in jails
Flopped Joe and Doug and I upon the floor28
And slept the morning through until the door
Swung open to admit the C.E.C.29
Ma Oustance with them in all purity30
Her virtuous nose up-tilted as she smelled
The odour of the Jungles where we dwelled
Sans soap, sans water, with malodorous socks,
Unshorn and combless my fast-thinning locks.31

notes that his pseudonym was “Morgan.”

24. MacCausland probably refers to Alex MacAuslane, a Canadian Congress of Labour (ccl) organizer in British Columbia who later worked with Murphy when he was elected first vice-president of the newly re-established BC Federation of Labour in 1944.

25. Presumably, part of MacCausland’s electoral platform was to keep beer flowing as opposed to supporting temperance.

26. “Number Two, Gerrard” may refer to a Toronto address on Gerrard Street near Yonge Street, possibly a flophouse.

27. This might refer to Arthur “Slim” Evans, who was then an organizer for the Workers’ Unity League (wul) and would lead the famous On to Ottawa Trek in 1935. It could also refer to T-Bone Slim, a.k.a. Matt Valentine Huhta, the itinerant Wobbly songwriter during the 1920s. See Mark Damron, “T-Bone Slim: A Brief Biography of Matt Valentine Huhta,” IWW Biography, https://www.iww.org/history/biography/TBoneSlim/1. It has been suggested that he also belonged to the Saskatchewan wing of the wpc.

28. Joe may refer to J.B. (Joseph Baruch) Salsberg, a wul organizer in Southern Ontario and later a Toronto alderman and Ontario MLA. He headed the cpc’s trade union section and was dubbed the “commissar of the trade unions,” according to Irving Abella, Nationalism, Communism, and Canadian Labour: The cto, the Communist party, and the Canadian Congress of Labour 1935–1956 (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1973), 25. See also Gerald Tulchinsky, Joe Salsberg: A Life of Commitment (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2013). The “Doug” mentioned here remains a mystery.

29. “C.E.C.” refers to the Central Executive Council of the cpc.

30. Ma Oustance is a typographical error. Florence Custance was the cpc executive member who headed the Federation of Women’s Labour Leagues in the 1920s. A “rather prim woman, puritan in her habits and an idealist,” Custance could be “rigid and uncompromising” with individuals. She was attacked at the 1929 cpc convention for right-wing tendencies and lost her seat on the national executive committee. She died in 1929. Rodney, Soldiers of the International, 164–165.

31. Lita-Rose Betcherman, The Little Band: The Clashes between the Communists and the Canto the Second

Perceiving I was fettered, bound and cramped,
And all my young enthusiasm damped,
I sought a winder field in which to find
Expression for my fast-expanding mind.
With Burpee on a freight train, with great fear
Of Deviation’s dangers in my ear,
I travelled toward the prairies, sad, forlorn,
By unrequited love asunder torn.
The one I wanted most, who’d ne’er been kissed,
Capitulated to a Trotskyist.
The other’s woes were writ in sand – worse luck –
For she had wilted in the arms of Buck.
In Saskatoon we finally detrained,
Our meagre, joint resources sadly strained,
We hunted up Tom Ewen and were thrilled
To know that we could get our bellies filled.
We stoked “bouquets” for Farmer John, and there
I first encountered Wobblies in their lair.
We organised the slaves and made things hum
To strains of “Hallelujah, I’m a Bum”;
With them we preached “Industrial Control”,
Denouncing Politics with heart and soul.
Equipped with crimson tie and Wobbly card

---

Canadian Establishment 1928–1932 (Ottawa: Deneau Publishers, 1982), 42, notes that “In 1929, Harvey was twenty-four, tall, and attractive despite premature baldness.”

32. Presumably “winder” is a typographical error. He probably meant wider.

33. Tom Burpee was the CPC’s first national secretary. He was replaced by William Moriarty who was replaced by Jack Macdonald.

34. “Deviation” is probably an allusion to the right-wing deviationists that Bolshevik leaders warned were counter-revolutionary opportunists.

35. This refers to Tim Buck, Stalinist leader of the CPC from 1929 to 1962. Murphy was an early Buck protégé.

36. Tom McEwen, a.k.a. Tom Ewen, was a key CPC leader, secretary of the WUI for which Murphy worked in the 1930s, and later editor of the Communist Pacific Tribune.

37. “Farmer John” could simply be a generic reference meaning a farm hand, a ladies man, or unsophisticated behaviour. It might also refer to John Brownlee who became the United Farmers of Alberta (UFA) premier in the 1930s. It could even be a reference to Murphy’s sojourns as part of the Prairie harvester workforce in the early 1920s. See John Herd Thompson, “Bringing in the Sheaves: The Harvest Excursionists, 1890–1929” Canadian Historical Review 59, 4 (December 1978): 467–489; and W.J.C. Cherwinski, “A Miniature Coxey’s Army’: The British Harvesters’ Toronto-to-Ottawa Trek of 1924,” Labour/Le Travail 32 (Fall 1993): 139–165.

And syndicalist phrases by the yard,
Again I braved Toronto, but they turned
A deaf ear to my theories and spurned
My proffered leadership, so freely lent.
So toward the South my hobo way I went.
I spent a week in Windsor where I found
No Y.C.L. above or underground,
Nor party either, worthy of the name;
I organised them both on solid plane.
This field being far too narrow for my pride
I took the Detroit River in a stride.
In this strange land I could not quite decide
With which one of the factions I should ride.
Too broke, too hungry and disconsolate
To judge each faction’s claim to rule the state,
My chaste political Achilles heel
Was soon the rival faction’s shafts to feel.
To zero all resistance being reduced,
By slick Jim Cannon I was nigh seduced.
The situation, though, was just my meat
With inner party strife at whitest heat.
I entered it and stormed bold Jay’s redoubt
Not knowing what the fuss was all about.
My natural bent for faction work soon found
Expression on this faction-tortured ground.
Bill Z became my leader in the fray,
All former gods stood forth with feet of clay.

39. “Y.C.L.” stands for Young Communist League but it was initially called the Young Workers’ League.

40. Murphy discusses his early sallies into the US in his interview with Alice Hoffman cited earlier.

41. There were three Communist Party factions in the US led by William Z. Foster, James P. Cannon, and Jay Lovestone.

43. “Jay” refers to Jay Lovestone, a member of the Socialist Party of America, a leader of the Communist Party USA (CPUSA) expunged by Stalin in favour of William Z. Foster, an advocate of American exceptionalism (arguing that American capitalism was strong in the US and therefore required the left to take more moderate approaches). He eventually became a labour spy for the Central Intelligence Agency and a right-wing adviser to the American Federation of Labour/Congress of Industrial Organizations. See Ted Morgan, A Covert Life: Jay Lovestone: Communist, Anti-Communist, and Spymaster (New York: Random House, 1999).

E’en Mack whom I had always idolised.\textsuperscript{45}
Appeared to shrink and seemed quite undersized—
(At thought of that great chief who led so well
The tears from my fond eyes in torrents fell
One night on Center Island in my cups,\textsuperscript{46}
Which roused the raucous mirth of hard-boiled pups).\textsuperscript{47}

At intervals between group caucusing
Bill urged that I should build a strong Left Wing\textsuperscript{48}
Among the miners; so without a flaw
I set them up from Maine to Arkansas.

I should digress at this point to relate
A heart affair that nearly sealed my fate:
One night into the Asses’ House I strayed\textsuperscript{49}
In working-plug habiliments arrayed.\textsuperscript{50}
I parked into a seat back near the door
And flopped my tattered cap upon the floor—
Anon, I was most strangely made aware
Of some rare Presence, nymphian and rare.
A glorious vision swam within my sight\textsuperscript{51}
And took the vacant seat upon my right.
Her Venus form was draped in clinging gown,
Incurring many a matron’s envious frown.
On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore
Which Jews might kiss and infidels adore
The stately goddess sweetly on me smiled
And rendered me as abject as a child.
She was a queen whom even Gods extol—
But Minor got there—curst be his soul!\textsuperscript{52}

\textsuperscript{45} “Mack” probably refers to Jack MacDonald who tried to bring about a balance between Tim Buck’s Stalinist faction and the party majority made up of Finnish, Ukrainian, and Jewish groups. His efforts failed and he was expelled from the CPC in 1931. He later became a Trotskyist.

\textsuperscript{46} Centre Island could refer to the location of a YCL training workshop on Toronto Island. The term “in one’s cups” describes someone who is drunk.

\textsuperscript{47} Young pups may refer to three radical young Communists – Becky Buhay, Oscar Ryan, and Charlie Marriot – who were for a short time considering the Trotskyist proposition of expelled CPC leader Maurice Spector. See Bryan D. Palmer, “Maurice Spector, James P. Cannon, and the Origins of Canadian Trotskyism,” Labour/Le Travail 56 (Fall 2005): 91–148.

\textsuperscript{48} “Bill” probably refers to William Foster, although it could be William Moriarty, the CPC’s national organizer in the late 1920s and early 1930s. See Rodney, Soldiers of the International, 167.

\textsuperscript{49} The labour hall in Detroit was known as the House of the Masses.

\textsuperscript{50} Habiliments from the French \textit{habillement} were items of clothing associated with a profession.

\textsuperscript{51} Refers to Lydia Gibson, Communist author and political cartoonist for various left publications including The Masses and The Liberator. She was married to fellow cartoonist Bob Minor.

\textsuperscript{52} “Fighting Bob” Minor (1884–1952) was an innovative political cartoonist, radical
Like Tarquin as the fair Lucreese be gauged\textsuperscript{53}
Vesuvian passion on my gizzard raged;
I vowed I would her loyalty divide,
Thus balm my jealousy and sooth my pride.
I was not unsuccessful in my scheme
Which roused the long cartoonist’s angry spleen.\textsuperscript{54}
He thought[\textit{t}] her his exclusively, and yet
She handed me that night – a cigarette.

\textit{Canto the Third}

Loaded with kudos and with laurel bough
Perched high upon my hair-receding brow
Back to Toronto soon my steps retraced,
Resolved the party backwardness be faced.
I ne’r saw such stagnation in my life;
They’d made no step toward inner-party strife.
I could not let the skill and training learned
Across the Line exist without being turned
To practical account, quite soon was formed
A group – right in the midst of which I horned.
But soon my bright career almost closed
When in our faction’s bosom core there nosed
A Trotskyist wolf in Comintern attire\textsuperscript{55}
As leader breathing Revolution’s fire.
This balled up everything, for how could we
Combat right dangers in such company?
Should I keep silent, sitting on the lids
Till Mack and Mike were safely on the skids?\textsuperscript{56}
I feared my silence would be made to seem \textsuperscript{53} The reference is to Shakespeare’s \textit{The Rape of Lucrece} (1594), a poem about the legendary Lucretia whose rape by the son of the king and subsequent suicide led to the revolution that overthrew the monarchy and the creation of the Roman Republic. The last king of Rome was Lucius Tarquinius Superbus.

\textsuperscript{54} The cartoonist was Bob Minor.

\textsuperscript{55} Refers to Maurice Spector, who chaired the CPC but became a Trotskyist thus splitting with the Comintern.

\textsuperscript{56} Mike is Michael Buhay, brother of Becky Buhay. See Rodney, \textit{Soldiers of the International}, 163, for short biographies. Donald William Muldoon, “Capitalism Unchallenged: A Sketch of Canadian Communism, 1939–1949,” MA Thesis, Simon Fraser University, 1977, 103, notes that Michael Buhay became a union organizer in Montréal’s garment industry and was a founding member of the CPC, but “he had supported MacDonald in the 1929 party crisis and was subsequently expelled only to return in the early forties to begin his career in municipal politics.”
A base complicity in Spector’s scheme.
And yet, to think of all the nasty cracks
We’d made on Mack in all our group’s attacks
He’d have the satisfaction after all
Our group had done to bring about his fall,
Of moving the expulsion of our chief
And make us all vote with him, to our grief.
You will admit it was no easy choice
To wreck our group, and that with our own voice.
Yet that we did – adieu ye caucus feasts –
We threw Genossen Spector to the beasts.57

Here I should pause and interject a word
About the amorous side of me, now stirred
To painful depths; I’d hoped when I returned
That my advances would no more be spurned.
Alas! to my chagrin I found the broads
Preempted by the Party overlords.
Each Grace had hitched her waggon to a star
While rank-and-filers worshipped from afar.
I covered my discomfiture and pain
Beneath a cynic’s pose, and made quite plain
My great indifference to siren wiles,
Imperviousness to sly come-hither smiles.
I ridiculed the slobberers who’d place
High value on Romance’s warm embrace;
And in their moon-struck faces shook my fists
And branded them as sentimentalists.
But ‘twas all false – I hungered like the rest
To coo and croon and cuddle with the best.
And yearned with all my he-man passions’ zest
To press a shiksa to my hairy chest,58
And longed my weary fevered head to rest
Upon some snowy undulating breast.

Canto the Fourth

My Party status was as yet too low,
Although my climbing had been far from slow,
To make an impress on the flighty kind
Of local frail with a romantic mind.
I needed local, district victories
Not too far from Toronto’s boundaries.
With such increased prestige and art discreet
I’d bring inamoratas to my feet.59

I pulled a strike in Hamilton which showed60

57. Genossen is Hebrew or Yiddish for comrade.
58. Shiksa is Hebrew or Yiddish for gentile girl.
59. Inamorata (Italian) is a female lover.
60. This refers to the National Steel Car strike of 1929 in Hamilton. The CPC leadership assigned Murphy to organize strike support. Tim Buck, Thirty Years – 1922–1952: The Story of
I was the only one could bear the load
Of great responsibility and lead
The slaves to glorious victory with speed.
A novel scheme I put into effect:
A strike’s new aristocratic sect
I did create; they stood above the rest –
I rated riveters by far the best.
The dollymen and lowly heater boys
I placed in lower caste, with lesser joys,
These base untouchables affected grief
When they got only half as much relief.
Nor Shelley’s tears nor importunities
Could make me cancel one of my decrees,
Nor could her strong political protest
Deter me when determined to invest
Relief funds in a Ford of doubtful speed
To tote the strike chief o’er a far-flung field.

   No leader’s life though it be e’er so pure
But falls at some time to a false allure.
And on my own escutcheon there’s a blot –

   The comrades should forget, but they’ll not –
This dark, indelible, disgraceful stain
Still casts its sombre shadow on my name:
I got it when in young exuberance
I fell for Mosher’s guile and honeyed glance.

Why worry? Did not others once likewise
Consort with Trotsky, laud him to the skies?
They lived it down in time and so will I
And it will be forgotten bye and bye.

Unconquered by repining or defeat

the Communist Movement in Canada (Toronto: Progress Books, 1952), 37, states that “Murphy, then twenty-two years of age, led that strike like a veteran.”

61. The reference to Shelley most likely refers to Minerva Davis, a young Communist assigned to assist Murphy with the Hamilton strike. After joining the ycl in 1919, she adopted the pseudonym Minnie Shelley or Rose M. Shelley. See Minerva Davis, The Wretched of the Earth and Me: One Girl’s Communist Struggle in 1920s Toronto (Toronto: Lugus Publications, 1992), 113, in which she describes Murphy as “capable,” “hard working” and “very devoted to the trade union movement.” The reference to Shelley could also be to Shelley Rogers, a long-time Communist trade union activist who left the Party with Fergus McKean. McKean joined the cpc in 1932 and became BC district secretary in the mid-1930s. In the 1940s he charged the cpc with subscribing to revisionist theory. See Fergus McKean, Communism Versus Opportunism: An Examination of the Revision of Marxism in the Communist Movement of Canada (Toronto: cpc Organization Committee, 1946).

62. The correct spelling is escutcheon, a shield with a coat of arms.

63. Refers to Aaron Mosher, president of the All-Canadian Congress of Labour (accl) established in 1927. In 1940, it merged with other groups to become the Canadian Congress of Labour (ccl) with Mosher as its president. John Manley, “Communists and Autoworkers: The Struggle for Industrial Unionism in the Canadian Automobile Industry, 1925–36,” Labour/Le Travail 17 (Spring 1986): 105–133, 117, notes that in 1928, Mosher allowed Murphy and other Communists to serve as “unofficial organizers” during a multi-city autoworkers’ strike.
CCL president Aaron Mosher disliked Reds like Murphy and worked to purge them from the movement.

BC District Union News, 23 October 1950, 8.

Workers rally in support of the founding of the Workers’ Unity League. Murphy and Bruce worked as organizers for the WUL.

evelynhartthetorontoglobeandmail.wordpress.com
I next directed wanderlusting feet
Once more toward the West, this time to match
My wits and skill with Wheatley and to snatch\textsuperscript{64}
The miners from his lewd embrace and tear
Them from the faker’s clutch and let them share
All through the wizardry of my intrigue
The blessings of the Workers’ Unity League.\textsuperscript{65}
A driving party boss I cracked the whip
On comrades giving opposition lip;
A proletarian Cromwell’s holy wrath
I poured on all who dared to cross my path.
Mine were the Delphic words they must obey
Or else in outer Party darkness lay,
And in my scorn administer rebuke
To every loyal Labor Temple Uke.\textsuperscript{66}
The Crowsnest shook at my imperious tread
And scores were left politically dead.
Coleman’s foundations to their base I shook\textsuperscript{67}
And in the ruins lay John Stokuluk.\textsuperscript{68}
A journal learned I published – its main job
Being to impale A-1 Levers so the mob\textsuperscript{69}
Could see what happened [to] enemies outside
The Party, and I hung his yellow hide
Out on a picket fence in Wayne to dry –\textsuperscript{70}
A warning grim to every passer-by.

\textsuperscript{64} This refers to Frank Wheatley, a one-time president of the Mine Workers Union of Canada (\textsc{mwuc}), who was seen as a moderate who hired John Stokaluk as an organizer. Seager, “A History of the Mine Workers’ Union of Canada,” 59, describes him as “a God-fearing Fabian who ... regarded the trade union movement, not as a weapon in the class war, but as a vehicle for the spiritual and moral uplifting of the worker.”

\textsuperscript{65} The wul existed from 1929 to 1935 when the \textsc{cpc} ended it and adopted the new party policy of working within the established labour movement.

\textsuperscript{66} This refers to the Ukrainian Labour Farmer Temple Association. For a full explanation of its association with the \textsc{cpc}, see John Kolasky, The Shattered Illusion: The History of Ukrainian Pro-Communist Organizations in Canada (Toronto: pma Books, 1979).

\textsuperscript{67} Coleman was one of the three main mining communities in the Crow’s Nest mining region of Alberta where Murphy organized and supported union activity. Murphy also adopted it as one of his aliases.

\textsuperscript{68} The misspelled Stokaluk was national secretary of the \textsc{mwuc}, a Communist, Ukrainian, and Murphy’s foe during the 1932 Crow’s Pass strike. Seager points out that the dispute between Stokaluk and Murphy stemmed from the “basic make up of the Communist movement in western Canada.” “Big John” would not cooperate with Murphy, including a refusal to distribute the Murphy-edited \textit{Western Miner}. Seager notes that in December 1929, Stokaluk and most of the Coleman Ukrainian temple membership were banned from the \textsc{cpc} on Murphy’s advice for “truculence.” Seager, “A History of the Mine Workers’ Union of Canada,” 85 and 88.

\textsuperscript{69} A-1 Levers possibly refers to bosses or to enemies of the \textsc{cpc}.

\textsuperscript{70} Wayne, Alberta, is the Drumheller mining district.
The art of living learned in old [W]ard days
I made good use of, with my winning ways
And Irish blarney weaved a subtle spell
O’er housewives’ gentle hearts – Lord, how they fell
Nor piteous tales of my ascetic life,
Of meals of “coffee-ans” and furious strife.\textsuperscript{71}
The women comrades’ tender hearts I broke
When with fine Machiavellian art I spoke.
With unction I applied the potent bull,
Their cooking praised and stuffed my belly full;
On all my frequent visits they prepared
Gargantuan feasts which left their cupboards bared,
While turkeys with foreboding oft did dream
Of guillotine and sanguinary stream.

My path was sometimes rough, despite renown,
I soared to heights and sometimes I was down.
For instance my temerity once led
Me to attack Kid Burns, and on his head\textsuperscript{72}
From the rostrums poured the vials of my scorn
Which left him sullen, moody and forlorn.

\textsuperscript{71} “Coffee-ans” was slang of the day for coffee and a doughnut, a cake, or a cheap meal.

\textsuperscript{72} Rodney, \textit{Soldiers of the International}, 122, notes that Kid Burns, Lewis McDonald’s nickname, was an amateur boxer who served two years in jail in the mid-1920s for assaulting William Sherman, the District 18 president of the United Mine Workers of America (\textit{UMWA}), during a strike in Drumheller, Alberta.
I was too self-assured in my zeal
As time was soon to painfully reveal.
One night we met, and, contrary to law,
He crashed his mighty fist against my jaw.
My lights went out as with an awful thud
He dumped me on my backside in the mud.⁷³

Canto the Fifth

With great industrial masses on my list
I next launched forth as an agronomist;
At U.F.A. conventions muscled in,⁷⁴
Among the delegates of hoary age
And patriarchal facial foliage.
Upon the platform when I made my speech
Was every form of rural human leech –
Old Wood and Garland, Gardner and the gang⁷⁵
Of future ccf’ers, but I rang
Their death-knell in voice full trumpet-toned,
The while the audience in anguish groaned.
I fumed, I stormed, I vilified and jeered,
I castigated and reviled and sneered,
Denounced and charged, indicted and inveighed
Against the fakers on the stage arrayed.
I tore the lid off so that all could see
Their vile political skullduggery.
Bill Irvine squirmed and wriggled and disclaimed⁷⁶
As my stern minatory digit aimed
At him as one of fakerdom’s worst spawn,
Assiduously at work from night to dawn
Advancing his career at farmers’ cost,
And if not “liquidated” all was lost.
    The miscreant made denial with a howl,
I squelched him with my awesome Jorian scowl.⁷⁷

⁷³. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 49, notes that Burns “knocked out one of Murphy’s teeth ... and threatened to knock out more.”
⁷⁵. Henry Wise Wood was elected president of the UFA in 1916 and helped the party form the government of Alberta in 1921. Edward Joseph “Ted” Garland was elected in the 1921 federal election as a candidate for the Progressive Party of Canada. Robert Gardiner won a seat in a 1921 federal by-election, making him the first UFA Member of Parliament.
⁷⁶. William Irvine was a three-time Member of Parliament, representing labour, the UFA, and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (ccf). He also participated in the radical “Ginger Group” of MPs. See Anthony Mardiros, William Irvine: The Life of a Prairie Radical (Toronto: James Lorimer, 1979).
⁷⁷. Jorian is derived from Jorel, a Hebrew term meaning God will uplift, which suggests godlike anger, but the meaning of “Jorian scowl” is unclear.
The place was in a tumult from my spiel [sic],
My own supporters e’en began to squeal.
They were outraged and shocked, and out upon
A stretcher, down and out, went Axelson,
From the right line I ne’er did deviate
Though tenth-rate comrades criticise and prate.
The Center will attest my sterling worth,
And silence ribald Party critic’s mirth,
Though even yet they ruefully reflect
On all the telegrams I sent “collect”.

My restless energy could not be bound
By District limitations, so I found
A field most fruitful, wide, neglected long
By Party leaders, so with purpose strong
I wrote the famous “Women’s Program” which Could not be bettered even by Illyich.

This first our women sternly claimed the right
Of one hour’ work per day and five each night.
A valued contribution, too, I gave
To the Trade Union Problem just to save
The Party from dire opportunist breaks,
And halt affiliation’s “Right” mistakes.
The question was: should we continue to
Give infant unions to the Mosher crew?
Or should we hold them as a nucleus
For new Trade Union Center built by us?
I cut the Gordian knot as strong men do
And solved the problem, giving orders to
Alf Hautamiki who at my mere word
Attached them to the Ontario Liquor Board.

Canto the Sixth

Although my fame had spread both far and near
And as a Leader I had not a peer,
I felt I’d exercise a greater rule
If I would browse a while in Lenin School,

Erase the bad impressions of the past
And show the Duke that I was not declassed.

78. The correct spelling is spiel.
79. Refers to Clyde Carl Axelson, Communist president of the Farmers Unity League.
80. Refers to Vladimir Ilyich Lenin.
81. Alf Hautamaki was a union organizer and the Finnish Communist leader of the Lumber Workers’ Union.
82. Murphy attended the International Lenin School in Moscow for nine or ten months in the early 1930s. Established in 1926, it was disbanded in 1938.
83. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 112, states that “The Duke” refers to Stewart Smith, the son of Rev. A.E. Smith and an influential party leader under Tim Buck. See also Stewart Smith, Comrades and Komsomolkas, My Years in the Communist Party of Canada (Toronto: Lugus
It took three years for Taffy, Sims and Carr, the Duke and Weir – slaves to the samovar – But brains like mine in nine short months could learn All stored-up knowledge of the Comintern.

However, I was up against a wall – The Center had not chosen me at all; I had to act, regardless who’d be hurt, Or be hornsweediged out of my dessert. So knowing how to work things, I did wend My way to eastern seaport, there to send The news of fait accompli – or, in part – And though they’d rave[,] they’d okay and I’d start. In Montreal I found my prestige low, So cast about for ways to stage a show. My chance soon came in shape of diatribe Appearing in the worker from a scribe Out in Vancouver, one who saw a chance To make “sex radicals” cavort and prance. The freckled anthropoid from jungled bough Hurling verbal poison darts that hurt, and how! – But like plumbed knight from richly storied page, Of great Saint George against the dragon’s rage With trusty lance in stout defense of Dave I vanquished the vituperative knave. In my reply I prudently ignored The leftist tailism which he deplored;

84. Charles Sims, third head of the wul after Tom McEwen and James Litterick and an adherent to the Tim Buck faction in the CPC, and Sam Carr, also a key CPC leader with Buck, were early attendees of the Lenin School. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 112, states that “Taffy” refers to Leslie Morris. Betcherman, The Little Band, 98, refers to Morris as “one of the petted young intellectuals that excited Harvey Murphy’s envy.”

85. John Weir was also at the Lenin School.

86. “Center” refers either to CPC secretary Tim Buck directly or to the CPC national executive committee. They eventually let Murphy go to Moscow.

87. Bruce edited The Worker from 1922 to 1924 and again starting in mid-1929. The scribe’s identity is unknown.

88. The term sex radicals may refer to individuals in Vancouver or it could concern the free-love movement in the 1920s with its linkages to Sigmund Freud and Marx in the quest to fight American capitalism.

89. “Dave” could be Dave Kashtan, a YCL organizer in the 1930s. See Kirk Niergarth, “‘Fight for Life’: Dave Kashtan’s Memories of Depression-Era Communist Youth Work,” Labour/Le Travail 56 (Fall 2005): 199–236. It could also refer to Dave Weiss, a Montréal YCL activist who sparred with Murphy over party policy regarding unemployment.

90. John Manley, “Starve, be damned!’ Communists and Canada’s Urban Unemployed, 1929–39,” Canadian Historical Review 79, 3 (September 1998): 466–491, 468, explains that Bruce took a “trenchantly” hard line against Montreal YCLers who were indulging in “easterners’ ‘tailism’” for arguing that the party needed to focus on transients and work with unemployed
And as a politician, always keen,
I seized the chance to stride upon the scene
And grab publicity, for don’t you see
The Center had not yet selected me
As student, though it is the general rule
To send outstanding genius to the School.

On charges made I did not write a line,
But I lambasted haughty District Nine,91
Said sharply to the captious B.C. gnome
Self-criticism should begin at home.

I charged them with not having moved a hair
Toward organising mines in their care,
That all that had been done in far B.C.
Was done by District Eight – and that is ME ... 92
By stacks of WESTERN MINERS which I sent93
Although I have no inkling where they went
After I sent them, (Later on I learned
That they suppressed them after having spurned
Their contents as a “mess of muddled tripe”
Which made them think the writer hit the pipe[.]"

Though bold I wrote I still disquiet felt
At thought that those birds might remove my pelt;
I feared that Bruce and Bennett in their spleen94
Might wreck me with their mimeograph machine.
You see, they had a wretched weekly sheet,
And for those cannibals I’d just be meat.
I didn’t rile them too much, being content
To show the sloth I’d cure that I had been sent To duplicate work done by District Eight.

However, my life’s purpose was achieved,
Though other aspirants were sorely grieved,
I was the one to make the trip across
Thus Mecca’s gain was Canada’s great loss.
At last I sailed, my pilgrimage begun,
Face touching deck, prone toward the rising sun.

---

91. The CPC divided the country into districts. District 8 was Alberta and District 9 was British Columbia. This may also refer to a similar numbering system for UMWA districts.

92. Rodney, Soldiers of the International, 156, notes that Murphy was assigned to District 8 which included mining areas in both BC and Alberta.

93. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 48, notes that Murphy got financial assistance from MWUC president James Sloan to start the Western Miner.

Canto the Seventh

I was impatient with the tub’s slow speed,
And sighed for wings to fill my chafing need.
It seemed an age before my famished eyes
Beheld the minarets in Mecca’s skies –
Although I must confess I’d cooled a lot
Toward tackling stuff the Red Professors taught.

Mecca looked good to me and I had hopes –
Provided I’d a friend who knew the ropes.
Of mere vicarious joys I’d had my fill
And felt frustrated and quite blue until
I met one Springy, and we made a pair.95
Of gay Lotharios96 round Pushkin Square.97
He took me round, we met the very best,
My well known sex appeal did all the rest.
I grabbed a soulmate from a shock brigade
Whose errant fancy to great Leaders strayed.
I gained in amour’s technique every day,
Urged on by Passion’s call: “Skooray, skooray”.

In School I was the boss iconoclast
And turned loose many a strident, withering blast
Against the students who in reverence stood
Before authorities half understood.
And once the German students threatened to
Have me garrotted by the Gay Pay Os98
When I declared in voice both loud and deep
That Marx’s theories put me to sleep.

At last I came from Leningrad’s far shore,
Bursting with revolutionary lore.
And inasmuch as students, newly learned,
To higher tasks their erudition turned,
With gesture wiping out all past disgrace,
They pitchforked me into Tom Ewen’s place.99

95. “Springy” probably refers to British Communist Douglas Frank Springhall (often called Dave), another Lenin School student who later became a Spanish Civil War political commissar and Soviet spy. See Boris Volodarsky, Stalin’s Agent: The Life and Death of Alexander Orlov (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2015), 184.

96. A Lothario is a man whose chief interest is seducing women.

97. Pushkin Square is one of the busiest in Moscow. It was named after Alexander Pushkin considered by some to be Russia’s greatest poet.

98. Gay Pay Os likely refers to the OGPU, which at the time was the name of the Soviet secret police.

99. “Ewen” or McEwen became the founding national director of the Wul in 1929. Eighteen months later he was jailed along with Buck, Bruce, and the other CPC leaders sometimes called the Kingston Eight. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 146, notes that James Litterick, later to become the first Communist elected to a provincial parliament, replaced Ewen. It is unclear, therefore, what Bruce meant by Murphy being pitchforked into Ewen’s place, since he was by then working under Litterick as a Wul organizer.
This brings me to the present, and some day
I may resume this great, heroic lay.
My course has not by any means been run,
My Leninistic work is just begun.
For still I carry on to higher peak,
An even greater glory yet to seek.
And should I seek earned rest and work no more
Or, unexpected, stand on Lethe’s shore,100
On Fame’s illustrious scroll my name you’ll find
In workers’ hearts my memory enshrined,
My footprints left where none but Lenin trod,
And worshiped by all miners as a God.101

Irish Chiefs and Scotch Traducers102

Being an alleged reply by Murph
by Malcolm Bruce

Who is this libelous and leprous swine
Who prostitutes the art of verse and line
To spin irreverent biography
And call the sorry tripe a work of mine?

While I in Labor’s cause through the West
To Brownlee’s103 janissaries104 bared my breast
This moron scribbles his buffooneries
In housed security as Bennett’s guest.105

While I inspire great proletarian throngs
He’s sloughed up where he properly belongs –
A jailhouse poetaster with vile pen
Salaciously indicting lecherous songs.

‘Tis jealousy inspires his owlish screech,
His creaking doggerel and noisome speech –

100. Lethe, the River of Forgetfulness, is one of the five rivers of Hades in classical Greek mythology.

101. Interestingly, Sergeant J.A. Cawsey of the Blairmore, Alberta, rcmp Detachment, reported on 14 November 1934, that Murphy was “a little ‘God’ among the Reds [and] this feeling is general throughout the Pass.” See RG 146, Volume 4673, 4674, Library and Archives Canada (hereafter lac).

102. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 112, confirms that the poem borrowed its title from Lord Byron’s English Bards and Scotch Traducers in which Byron satirized the literary critics at The Edinburgh Review.

103. John Edward Brownlee was Alberta’s fifth premier, serving from 1925 until 1934.

104. A Janissary is a loyal political supporter (from Turkish military terminology).

105. Refers to Prime Minster R.B. “Iron Heel” Bennett.
“Base envy withers at another’s joy
And hates that excellence it cannot reach.”

He apes the style, for his obnoxious feats,
Of Goldsmith, Pope and even the great Keats;
Fouling the Muse, he dips his sewer quill,
Smirches the page and cowardly retreats.

But I whenever forced to recognise
The slanderer ape’s piled up putrescent lies
Employ great Khayyam’s style to lay him low
And raise myself triumphant to the skies.

There with the other outcasts let him rot,
With criminals and the whole pervert lot
Lampooning real leaders and although
Some strive for his release, here’s one who’ll not.

106. Omar Khayyam was an influential twelve-century Persian poet also known for his scientific and philosophical writings. As a poet, he became known in the West for his Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.
As noted at the outset, the poems give rise to several speculations as to what motivated Bruce to write them. Were they the work of an envious colleague or were they a fun-loving poke at a fellow Communist? Were they written in bitterness in an attempt to undermine Murphy’s growing reputation? Or were they a laudatory statement, even a celebration, of a rising party star? Perhaps this was less a putdown of the young Communist and more a locker room-type joke in the spirit of masculine camaraderie. Before addressing these questions, a brief review of the biographies of both men will help clarify some of the references in the poems.¹⁰⁷

Undoubtedly, Murphy, born Harvey Chernikovsky on 1 July 1905 in Poland, was a committed, if occasionally unruly, Red with an enviable oratorical talent for swaying opinions.¹⁰⁸ Historian Allen Seager called him “the most influential communist in the Canadian trade-union movement in the 1940s” and “a colourful and resourceful foe of anti-communist forces.”¹⁰⁹ But it was not surprising that the saga of Murphy’s “life among the mass” had not been immortalised in proletarian song or even in mainstream labour history. Bryan D. Palmer, for example, cited Murphy’s “authoritarian arrogance,” calling him “a bombastic blend of talent and chutzpah.”¹¹⁰ The increasingly anti-Communist leaders of the two central labour organizations – the Trades and Labour Congress (TLC) and the All-Canadian Congress of Labour (ACCL) – would have agreed.¹¹¹ Nor did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) see Murphy in a positive light, characterizing him as a “persistent, reckless and dangerous agitator.”¹¹² RCMP commissioner Cortlandt Starnes and his stable of police

¹⁰⁷. The transcripts of six lengthy interviews with Murphy conducted near the end of his life, the longest being Knight, “Harvey Murphy,” yield much useful biographical data. The Defence of Canada Regulations advisory committee chaired by Daniel O’Connell, Toronto, 1 December 1941, also conducted a lengthy interview before sending Murphy to an internment camp in 1942. See RG 146, Volume 4673, 4674, LAC.

¹⁰⁸. Murphy cited contradictory birthdates in various interviews. The most persistent date on record, however, seems to be 1905. See the Alice M. Hoffman transcript of her Murphy interview, Islington, Ontario, 31 March 1976, 1. July 1 is the date specified in a Department of External Affairs memo signed by J.J. Connelly, a passport officer, Ottawa, 30 March 1931.

¹¹¹. The ccl subsumed the accl in 1940.

¹¹². Cortlandt Starnes, RCMP Commissioner, letter to A.L. Joliffe, Commissioner of Customs, Department of Immigration and Colonization, Ottawa, 30 April 1930, in an attempt to have Murphy deported as a “public service.”
spies constantly followed and reported on Murphy’s activities in what might have seemed a comical cat and mouse chase to some observers. Indeed, Murphy had chutzpah and he used it to charm both Starnes’s spies and the political enemies he would acquire during his long tenure as a CPC stalwart.

Oddly both local union leaders and later some captains of the mining and smelting industry shared a sometimes grudging respect for him. “Murphy was a very clever, accomplished and cagey operator, a great public speaker, and a superb strategist,” wrote Al King, president of Mine-Mill Local 480 in Trail, BC, where Murphy acted as chief negotiator from its certification in 1944 to 1955, “But he could also on occasion be an unscrupulous bastard.” Mine-Mill lawyer John Stanton shared that mixed view, claiming that Murphy could be engaging and “related well to working people who enjoyed his gravelly-voiced exposes of the greed and stupidity of certain employers and politicians.” But “a generous ego and a certain foxiness were so noticeable that one could never be quite sure where one stood with Murphy.”

Bill White, a fellow Communist labour leader with the shipbuilders’ union remembered him as “an easy guy to buy a drink for,” but he was the “right-wingers’ favourite target when it came to making an attack.” White later condemned Murphy as a sell out when the IMMSW merged with the United Steelworkers of America (USWA).

As management saw him, Murphy was “really their leader [the mine and smelter workers] and that was it,” causing them to both suspect him and respect him. Some would argue that he was a little too comfortable hobnobbing with such managers as he sat across the bargaining table from them. Nor would he escape criticism within the CPC for disobeying orders when it suited his strategies for local organizing drives or contract negotiations. “For the last god-damn time,” wrote Tom McEwen, Murphy’s WUL boss, “will you send a copy or two of the Minutes of the [Workers’] Unity Conference?”

113. See police surveillance reports obtained by the author using Access to Information legislation, which track Murphy’s movements from his first arrest, RG 146, Files A2009-00396, LAC.

RCMP officers were ordered to keep close surveillance on Murphy as early as 1929 when this profile was compiled by the Prince Rupert, BC, detachment.

Note: A transcription of this document appears on the facing page.

RG 146, Files A2009-00396, LAC (1929-1942).
ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

“O” Division, Place: Toronto, Ontario
Ref. No. “O” Div. 6/655, H.Q. Ref. 175P/2972 Date: December 7, 1930

Personal History File
Re: Harvey Murphy

Name: Harvey Murphy

Alias: –

Nationality: Irish descent, Born in Canada

If Naturalized:

When and how arrived in Canada: –

Description: – Age: Approximately 24
Weight: 170 lbs.
Height: 5’10”
Build: Heavy
Colour of Hair: Bald in front.
Colour of Eyes: Brown.
Glasses (if worn): –
Complexion: Swarthy.
Hair on Face: Clean Shaven.
Teeth: Fairly Good.
Nose: Straight.
Deformities: –
Marks: –
Peculiarities: Walks with a slouch.
Usual Dress: Does not wear hat in summer time.

Manner: Course.
Habits: (Smokes, Drinks, Gambles, etc.) Smokes Cigars and pipe, and drinks – pool player.

Speech: Coarse, guttural.
Languages Spoken: English.

Photo: –

Married or Single: Single.
Family: –

Home address: –
No set home.

Present address: –

If not married, parents name and address: Detroit.

Past and Present Occupation: Auto labourer.

Police Record (if any): Charged with disorderly conduct Sept. 12 and fined $25.00 and costs or 10 days. Sentence appealed and conviction quashed.

Associations affiliated with: T.C.L., C.P. of C. Auto Workers’ Industrial Union

Influence and standing in same:
No position in Party but in good standing
Organizer Auto Workers’ Industrial Union

Intimate associates: Extremely friendly with Bruce, Buck, Stewart, ? Sims, Rose and all leading lights of Party.

Ability and influence as Agitator: Minor.

Present locality of activities: Toronto, Oshawa and Windsor, chiefly amongst Auto Workers’ Industrial Union in interests of C.P. of C.

General Remarks: Murphy first came to prominent attention during the Oshawa strike in April 1929. Later he interested himself in the formation of the auto Workers Industrial Union in Windsor, Oshawa and Toronto. He was again active in the Steel Workers’ Strike at Hamilton and also took an active part in the Free Speech Demonstrations at Toronto.

List of Files in which this man appears: – with him to “for Christ sake come down to earth.”118 Clearly, McEwen and Bruce were frustrated with Murphy’s methods, but they could not deny his success as an organizer of both unemployed workers and miners in the 1930s. As BC cpc leader Maurice Rush noted, Murphy was a “charismatic and successful organizer” who “played a major role in the working-class and people’s movements of B.C.”119 Still, Communist critics like Jack Scott considered him dictatorial and christened him “lord over all he surveyed.”120

Bruce, twenty-four years Murphy’s senior when the poems were written, was born in 1881 in Seal River, Prince Edward Island, to Scottish parents. He quit school at Grade Five when he was fifteen years old destined to become a carpenter. His earliest encounters with trade union militancy came when he joined a bricklayers’ strike at the Dominion Steel Company in Sydney, Nova

118. Letter to Murphy from McEwen, 19 December 1929, quoted in the transcript of Murphy’s Defence of Canada Regulations interview cited earlier.

120. Palmer, A Communist Life, 84. In the chapter “Working Out West: Harvey Murphy’s Fiefdom,” Scott describes several unpleasant experiences with Murphy in the 1940s when Murphy assigned him to Trail, BC, to “get the Party in shape.”
Scotia in 1898. In the early 1900s, he joined the radical Western Federation of Miners (WFM) in Butte, Montana, where he met the legendary WFM leader Big Bill Haywood. In 1910, he settled in Regina, Saskatchewan, joined the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, and became an organizer for the Socialist Party of Canada. While there, he may have been instrumental in the creation of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour, according to some labour historians.

Jack MacDonald, the second leader of the Workers Party of Canada (WPC), was so impressed with Bruce when they met in Saskatchewan that in 1922 the WPC executive agreed that Bruce would move to Toronto and become editor of The Worker, the party’s organ. Bruce, who became head of the CPC’s third district, chaired the second convention of the WPC in February 1923. That year, he was active as an organizer in a bitter strike of miners and steelworkers in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, guided by the legendary J.B. McLachlan whom the party had recruited the year before. The prominent east coast union leader at District 26 of the United Mine Workers of America (UMWA) felt a “particular kinship for Bruce who he considered “a battler ... who stood well with the miners.” Bruce appears to have distinguished himself during the strike as “the most vehemently leftist” participant, calling non-CPC steelworkers “yellow curs.” While in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, he organized several meetings “notable for their bitterness and outspoken emphasis on force and violence.” His “vitriolic” speeches led to his arrest for seditious conspiracy, but he was released for lack of evidence.

He was nominated to run in the 1923 provincial election, but lost as the Tories, under George Howard Ferguson, again won by a landslide. Still, Bruce garnered more votes than the CPC’s other candidate, MacDonald. (Murphy would not do nearly so well when he ran against William “Bible Bill” Aberhart

121. As with Murphy, the RCMP files on Bruce are voluminous and contain many candid observations about his personality and his actions. Otherwise, coverage of his historical role seems to be limited to Rodney’s capsulation of his early life in the party, Allen Engler’s too-brief obituary, “Malcolm Bruce, 1880–1967,” Workers Vanguard, Mid-May 1967, Seivewright’s “Malcolm Bruce” cited earlier, and a series of lectures in which Bruce provides snippets about who he was, reminiscences of his party work, and possible reasons for writing the two poems.

126. Engler, “Malcolm Bruce,” states that Bruce ran as a candidate for the Canadian Labour Party, which was started in 1917 by the TLC.
a dozen years later, losing badly to the future Alberta premier.) Bruce displayed some early bravado when he criticized the Central Executive Committee at the wpc’s third convention in 1924 for trying to create a united political front from above that failed to involve the rank and file below. The attack on party leadership lost him re-election to the executive. Nevertheless, he attended the Fifth Comintern in Moscow that year, travelling under the sobriquet F.J. Masson. Later in the 1920s, Bruce moved to California where he tried to organize carpenters in the Hollywood film industry, but he was eventually deported for his radical political activities. By 1927, he was in Vancouver.

By the late 1920s, he had earned a reputation as a “spellbinding orator” and proven himself a worthy party operative. Secret police reports show that the authorities regarded him as “one of the principal Communists in Canada, and probably [he] is first in point of courage, energy and bitterness.” A later police report described him as the foremost agitator in Canada and most dreaded debater within the Party. Ruthless in his methods of holding the reins inside the Party, he has a cold hatred of the ruling class, which never abates for a single moment, in Moscow he was dubbed “Canada’s Apostle of Hate.” A Zealot, fanatic... This dreaded debater, then, was at least Murphy’s equal as a persuasive orator and a possible mentor for the younger comrade. One historian characterized

Bruce as “a sharp-tongued, outspoken, bitter left-wing socialist”¹³⁰ who “often spoke out at labour gatherings” where he earned his reputation as a radical with his lengthy speeches about the need to oppose capitalism.¹³¹ Later in that decade he worked in the BC shipyards where he may have sustained a back injury in 1928. Police reported that he had been badly hurt after falling from a scaffold and was in “a precarious condition of health.”¹³² His bad health notwithstanding, by the time of his incarceration in Kingston, Bruce clearly had honed the colourful wit that he displayed in his Murphy poems and sharpened his ability to draw in “unwary hecklers to set them up for a rhetorical sucker punch and ritual pummelling.”¹³³

That the poems borrowed heavily on the style of 18th-century British Romantic poet Lord Byron (George Gordon) reveals Bruce as a more literary talent than his Grade Five education might suggest. He was a “self-taught proletarian intellectual” or autodidact who, like other leftist radicals, exhibited an “athletic enthusiasm for self-improvement through intellectual exercise provided them with their own personal model of social progress,” as historian Ian McKay explains.¹³⁴ He was widely read in the literary classics and displayed a self-learned understanding of literary style.¹³⁵ Though he does not explicitly copy Byron’s use of Spenserian stanzas in iambic pentameter, he does capture the necessary rhythm and rhyme. If we look first at the title of the long poem, we see that it plays on Byron’s title, Childe Harold’s Pilgrimage, “depicting a conceited, under-achieving candidate for greatness.” Byron wrote his poem in 1809 when the Napoleonic Wars were raging through Europe. It borrows on his observations during a two-year European voyage, telling the tale of a young British nobleman who “escapes his woes by embarking on a grand tour,” as Cambridge University’s John Gilroy notes. Gilroy argues that it is “a deeply personal work full of Byron’s ideas and opinions, full of mordant commentary on the political events of his time, and shadowed by his own publicly ¹³² “Memorandum for the Honourable the Minister of Justice,” LAC.

¹³⁵ Many labour leaders and left intellectuals were self-taught. Few had the funds to attend college or university. US Trotskyist Jim Cannon was one example of the “working-class autodidactic.” See Bryan D. Palmer, James P. Cannon and the Origins of the American Revolutionary Left, 1890–1928 (Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 2007), 45.
scandalous life.”

Although Byron insisted that the poem was not autobiographical, others argue that it was. Indeed, as one analyst noted, “Harold often vanishes entirely from the narrative to be replaced by Byron’s own narrative commentary.”

Bruce also attempted to borrow Byron’s structure and style in both his choice of title and his introduction. The word “Wilde” hints at a reckless man and police were in agreement with that assessment of Murphy. A later police report on the WUL’s Needle Trade Workers’ Industrial Union in Montreal, is perhaps the most scathing in its denunciation of Wilde Harvey. Unsigned and undated, its author claims to be quoting WUL leader Tom McEwen:

Murphy had the reputation of being tough and hard-boiled, but it was all bluff and bluster. When he got a few drinks into him he either went on a ‘crying jag’ or else became nasty. At a recent drinking party in Toronto[,] Murphy had attempted to kiss [words redacted] wife [words redacted]. When she had resisted him he had bit her neck so hard that she had fainted for half an hour. The incident had created a scandal in Communist circles in Toronto. (It is evident that Murphy is not popular in C.P. leadership).

In the introduction, which varies considerably from the nine-line stanza Byron used, Bruce continues in a sarcastic strain adding a show of false modesty when he compares Murphy favourably to Lenin and Marx. Murphy’s alleged arrogance spills from these lines: “Now that my fame has uninvited spread/ Until my very name inspires dread/ In Bosses’ hearts, and my renown has grown/ Until o’er all the earth my feats are known.” While Bryon invokes his muse in his introduction, Bruce uses it to note that “My innate modesty restrains my pen –/ I lay it down, I take it up again/ At last resolved to give posterity, The benefit of my activity.”

Byron uses only four cantos; Bruce includes seven. In Byron’s Canto I, he describes Child Harold’s character and his failings as well as detailing his family background. Bruce again follows the Romantic poet’s lead, writing that Murphy “sprang from lowly stock” and led a life of debauchery and dishonesty: “Time after time they chased me out of home/ And left me with the ‘Mission Stiffs’ to roam;/ And I was made an Ishmael many a time/ For drinking my

138. According to police reports obtained by the author under Access to Information legislation, officers were chasing a wild man indeed. Apparently, the party, wishing to “make ‘Wild’ Harvey less wild[,] exiled him to the snowy wastes of the French metropolis,” according to J.W. Phillips, Acting Commissioner, “E” Division, Vancouver, 7 January 1935. A Calgary report suggests that “it is generally known that Murphy suffered from Syphilis,” according to H.N. Trickey, Detective Sergeant, “K” Division, Edmonton, 20 June 1934, RG 146, File A2009-00396, LAC.

139. Police report (unsigned and undated), 26 November 1934, obtained by the author under Access to Information legislation, RG 146, File A2009-00396, LAC.
old man’s Yum Kipper wine.” Canto II allows Byron to continue in an autobiographical vein, venting his frustration about the despoiling of Greek ruins, mourning the loss of his mother and three deceased friends, and denouncing one of his lovers. In Bruce’s Canto II, Murphy, like Harold, travels to other lands in search of “a wider field,” not Greece but the Canadian Prairies and the United States. He too travels in search of a love affair. Unfortunately, unrequited love is torn asunder when “the one I wanted most, who’d ne’er been kissed,/ Capitulated to a Trotskyist.” Unlike Byron, here and throughout the other cantos, Bruce’s sarcasm flows unrelentingly. Canto III continues the poetic travelogue based on the voyages of Harold/Byron. This time Byron guides the reader into central Europe and a discussion of the Battle of Waterloo, death on the battlefield, and his respect for Napoleon and French philosopher Jean Jacques Rousseau. Bruce takes Murphy back to Toronto where “in our faction’s bosom core there nosed/ A Trotskyist wolf in Comintern attire.” Interestingly, Bruce was clearly still an adherent of Stalinism at his point and Trotskyists were favoured targets for ridicule. He again returns to Murphy’s search for a lover: “I hungered like the rest/ To coo and croon and cuddle with the best…../ To press a shiksa to my hairy chest.” Canto IV of the Byron poem has Harold again bemoaning the destruction of earlier civilizations and pondering the eventual demise of great empires. Byron also uses the canto to salute nature, art, and pay homage to his heroes. In the remaining cantos of the Bruce poem, we follow the continuing travels of Murphy who now moves back to western Canada where he engages in much activity to enhance his position in the eyes of the party leadership. In the final canto, where we are nearing the probable date of the poem’s writing, Murphy is sent to the Lenin Institute in Moscow. A training ground for young Stalinists, the school “was intended to create uniformity, commitment and efficiency, replicate the increasing conformity of the Russian party, filter deviancy and secure national allegiance to the politics of the Russian-dominated Comintern,” according to one account of the experiences of British attendees. Bruce’s poem takes us to prison where the eight cpc leaders are incarcerated. Murphy calls out “this moron” (Bruce) as he “scribbles his buffooneries/ In house security as [Prime Minister R.B.] Bennett’s guest.” Bruce is

140. John McIlroy et al., “Forging the Faithful: The British at the International Lenin School,”

141. Encyclopaedia Britannica Online, s.v. “English Bards and Scotch Reviewers,” last modified further described as a “jailhouse poetaster with vile pen” who “apes the style of Goldsmith, Pope and even the great Keats.” Oddly Byron is not mentioned.

What motivated Bruce to write the poems from his federal prison cell and why do so with what could be read as vehement invective? It is true that Murphy made and would continue to make enemies inside and outside the party. In the future, some former comrades would come forward to Red bait him.\textsuperscript{142} He would become a target of anti-Communists inside the labour movement who were anxious to expose him as a Moscow dupe or use his proud public declaration of CPC membership as a way to discredit his value as a union leader. Murphy would earn further opprobrium for hectoring the labour establishment for failing to fight more vigorously to organize the unorganized, support Communist leaders, and assist the masses of unemployed workers.

It is equally true that Bruce was known for his “caustic wit and being absolutely fearless in his criticism of trade union bureaucracy” of which Murphy became a part.\textsuperscript{143} Even so, what did Bruce hold against his young comrade in 1932? It is clear that he had been a keen observer of Murphy’s activities in both the CPC and the labour movement. So why would Bruce, the more experienced of the two men, write poems dripping with sarcasm about a rising young Communist star? What was to be gained from an apparent exposé of Murphy’s faults written by a major force in the Communist movement since the earliest days of the CPC? Or were the poems authored with a different intent? Murphy might have been a Bruce protégé at some point. Both men were dedicated Stalinists at the time. Murphy was said to have cut his political teeth at CPC Stalinist leader Tim Buck’s Toronto residence in the 1920s. Bruce was a founding member of the party and would become one of its national leaders. Both men were peripatetic rabble-rousers given to stepping outside party discipline if the situation demanded it. Both men liked alcohol and neither always handled it well perhaps explaining their tendency to verbally attack those with whom they disagreed.\textsuperscript{144} Again, though, why would Murphy become the object of Bruce’s ire if ire is what it was?

\textsuperscript{143} Seivewright, “Malcolm Bruce,” 1.

\textsuperscript{144} Rodney, \textit{Soldiers of the International}, 162, wrote that Bruce had an “inability to handle drink.” Murphy’s eldest son Rae testified to his father’s fondness for whiskey in a written response to questions submitted to him by the author, 1 November 2010.
From one viewpoint, Bruce might have been kidding Murphy about his wild side. He might have intended to regale him for his exploits or roast him as a celebrated young Communist. Certainly, by the time the poems were written Murphy was in his mid-20s and had already lived up to his reputation as a “Wilde” youth in Toronto, joining downtown rallies, heckling speakers, and being arrested, as Lita-Rose Betcherman describes his early years. Later police reports speculate as to his wildness. A 1934 Calgary report, for example, suggests “it is generally known that Murphy suffered from Syphilis.” In 1935, a Vancouver report noted that “the party, wishing to “make ‘Wild’ Harvey less wild[,] exiled him to the snowy wastes of the French metropolis [Montreal].”

But Bruce’s critical Communist eye and serious nature seem to render this speculation less likely. After all, Communists could be bitter rivals as was demonstrated by the battles for leadership supremacy recalled in the poems.

Murphy, for example, was involved in the ultimate ouster of party leader Jack MacDonald who was replaced by Murphy’s mentor Tim Buck. Locked up when he wrote the poems, Bruce might have felt compelled to express anger at his younger comrade’s sometimes-reckless behaviour. He might have recalled how he and other top leaders berated Murphy after the 1929 National Steel Car strike, discussed in the long poem. They argued that his “big stick” methods had produced a ‘complete lack of confidence in the party leadership.” From that perspective, the poems were no joking matter, but a serious critique of Murphy, one of the Young Turks of the CPC.

The Crow’s Nest Pass organizing battles in Alberta offer further evidence of the possible seriousness of the poetic critiques. Bruce and Murphy worked the same territory during the early 1930s, with Bruce making several speaking tours as the senior CPC leader, but Murphy won the day in the Pass strike of 1932 and was named town solicitor when the mine workers elected Canada’s first socialist municipal council in Blairmore. As historian Ian Angus has noted the party leadership blamed Murphy’s poor judgement during the strike, calling him “a right opportunist” who had perverted the party line. He added that

At the Workers Unity League congress that year, at which Stewart Smith, under the pseudonym of ‘Burns’ gave a major report in which ‘fully a third … dwelt on errors made during the Crowsnest Pass miners’ strike’. Endicott speculates that Smith (who was CP general secretary while Buck was in prison) was ‘reining in a growing admiration for the as yet insufficiently repentant Murphy.’

148. Kyle Randolph Franz, “Painting the Town Red: The Communist Administration at Blairmore, Alberta, 1933–1936,” MA Thesis, University of Lethbridge, 2007, notes that regardless of the results of the strike, Bill Knight, an MWUC leader and a strike picket captain, became mayor of Blairmore and led his council to inaugurate numerous socialistic policies as Canada’s first socialist municipal government. He was not defeated until 1936.
Angus concluded, “it could explain the poems – Bruce was demonstratively promoting the orthodox view, siding with [Stewart] Smith et al against Murphy. If so, it wasn’t a Stalinist-Trotskyist issue, but a division among Stalinists.”

Endicott elaborates on the CPC leadership’s condemnation of Murphy’s actions during the 1932 strike, noting that they labelled him “a bureaucrat – in effect a dictator – and a factionalist.” Seager argues that it was ideological differences within a diverse ethnic community, not Murphy’s leadership, which upended the strike. However, Murphy left himself open to party criticism when he convinced the so-called “radical foreigners” to accept a contract that offered the same wages as were agreed in 1930. Murphy acknowledged some errors, but he argued that the strike was “no mean achievement” and that it had advanced the larger WUL goals of inspiring local resistance to capitalist exploitation. Bruce, “not a personal admirer of Murphy,” faintly praised him for his work with the WUL in Alberta during the strike. However, in a

149. Ian Angus, email correspondence with the author, 21 May 2013.
152. Endicott, Raising the Workers’ Flag, 123.
separate discussion with the author, Endicott noted that “Murphy’s ways made him a prime subject for a poet.”

During that period, both men were prolific labour journalists and served as editors, Bruce on his second turn at the helm of the CPC’s Worker and Murphy as founding editor of the MWUC’s Western Miner. Both are mentioned in the poems. Could there have been editorial rivalry between the two? It would seem doubtful, but we are discussing men with large egos, potent pens, and driven personalities. Still, perhaps Bruce, with his vast experience as a labour organizer and party member, saw Murphy as an upstart who needed criticism. Perhaps he was jealous about the younger man’s organizing successes. Murphy had been arrested several times and jailed on occasion as a Red agitator while protesting for better industrial working conditions or the plight of the unemployed. These jail sentences won him recognition as a workers’ friend as occurred when he served a short jail term for his work with the MWUC in Alberta.

As mentioned at the outset, the simple answer might be that the poems were a way to pass the prison time by sharing a laugh about the sometimes-wild exploits of Comrade Murphy. But long-time CPC observers suggest that the “often poisonous atmosphere within the CPC” did not always lend itself to such antics. With Stalin tightening his grip on the Comintern as the Great Terror began, and the Buck Stalinists continuing to follow orders from Moscow, light-hearted gestures were probably not recommended. Other scholars speculate that the poems may have been an exercise in self-criticism on Bruce’s part or a self-confession about his complicit role in ushering the CPC into the Comintern’s Third Period emerging from the poor results of the early United Front policy. Historian John Manley explains that CPC leaders were at loggerheads over the decision to follow the “new line” and remove the party from involvement with the reformist “social fascists” in the CCL and the TLC. Both Bruce and Murphy were strong supporters of the hard line advised by A.S. Lozovsky, head of the Red International of Labour Unions (RILU), but it was “a leap into uncharted territory with only the barest survival kit.” Indeed, in taking this left turn there was fear that the decision to go it alone would further alienate the CPC from the labour movement bureaucracy.

Murphy’s daughter Maryann Hiebert (nee Murphy) added more mystery as to the reasons Bruce wrote the poems. She did not remember the details of the eventual disintegration of the Bruce-Murphy friendship, possibly after the two men lived together during their time in the burgeoning Vancouver shipbuilding industry during the Second World War.\textsuperscript{157} But she recalled in an interview that her mother, Isobel, whom Murphy married in 1934, “was angry about the rupture with Malcolm Bruce and reminded Harvey of his treatment of their good and close friend with some bitterness when he was in turn shunned by the party.”\textsuperscript{158} It was a sad and angry remembrance of how the Stalinist CPC treated its dissidents, but it would have had no influence on Bruce at that time, and therefore, could not have been a reason for the caustic tone of the poems.

155. Memo, CSIS, 2 January 1931, RG 146, Volume 4673, 4674, File 94-A-00003, LAC, notes that Bruce edited the Worker “in such a scurrilous manner that he had to be replaced.” Rodney, Soldiers of the International, 155, notes that in mid-1929, Bruce was reappointed editor of the CPC paper. Murphy wrote for the Worker and went on to edit the BC District Union News and the Mine-Mill Herald, both IUMMSW papers.

Perhaps Bruce himself supplied some of the answer to why he wrote the poems in a series of four lectures on the history of the CPC that he delivered in Vancouver in 1960. Murphy does not get mentioned as being among the bright lights of the early days. However, by the third lecture Bruce does discuss Murphy’s 1931 stint at the Lenin Institute where young leaders were “thoroughly indoctrinated.”\textsuperscript{159} He noted that “those men who came back from the Lenin school took over in almost every district in Canada and acted in a very bureaucratic manner.”\textsuperscript{160} In the last lecture Bruce talks of betrayal. “I never saw so many drop away under pressure of capitalist attacks and capitalist environment as I saw – and I do not refer to the rank and file now but prominent leaders – ruined and made into renegades, revisionists and class-collaborators as was done by Stalinism.”\textsuperscript{161} The period covered by the poems saw Murphy rising as one of those union and party bureaucrats.

As the 1930s ground on, Murphy continued to earn respect among the unemployed of the Great Depression as well as miners and smelter workers in BC and Alberta and he was a welcome speaker on picket lines and at rallies in support of relief camp workers. In the years after the poems were written, he assisted with major labour disputes at BC company towns like Anyox (1933) and Corbin (1935) where police collaborated with employers to break the strikes. At one point, police spies quoted him as claiming that he had participated in 500 strikes. He would use his early experience, working with leaders like Bruce, to eventually become the western regional director of the UUMMSW where he would continue to practice some of the shrewd and inventive methods alluded to in the poems. Much later he would mark many successes as a union negotiator and organizer of significant cultural events, including \textsuperscript{157} Knight, “Harvey Murphy,” 93, quotes Murphy saying “Malcolm had his differences with the Communist Party, but I didn’t go into that too much” while he was living at Bruce’s Wall Street address near the Princeton Hotel.

\textsuperscript{158} Maryann Hiebert, email correspondence with the author, 27 May 2013.

\textsuperscript{159} Malcolm Bruce, Class III lecture notes, Vancouver, 1960, 64, author’s copy.

\textsuperscript{160} Bruce, Class III lecture notes, 66.

\textsuperscript{161} Bruce, Class III lecture notes, 89.
the famed Paul Robeson concerts at the Peace Arch at Blaine, Washington, and his promotion of the blacklisted film Salt of the Earth in the early 1950s.

Bruce, like Murphy, remained an outspoken political force on the left during the Depression decade. His Communist past would follow him and police interest in Red Malcolm would increase. Over the course of Bruce’s three-year prison term (originally a five-year sentence), poetry had become an increasingly important and potent form of proletarian literature. But the classical Romantic style that Bruce used was fully out of vogue by then and poets of the 1930s were turning to modernism as a way to make their verses serve as left-wing political tools. They passionately demanded that readers move to the barricades to do battle for social change at home or take up arms to support the cause of Spain’s Republican government against Francisco Franco’s fascists.

By the time Bruce was released from prison, the left political terrain was changing as well and he and Murphy, along with other radicals, would be challenged to reassert their loyalty to the CPC in the wake of the founding of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) in 1932. It was a time to choose sides on the left, a time to make an ideological commitment either to fight capitalism or to join the “social fascists” of the socialist party. Both men chose to oppose the CCF for a time, but eventually came to support some of its policies and candidates in spite of CPC leadership dictates. The two political parties would soon be at war over which one would capture the allegiance and the votes of the working class, but the big ideological battles were still in the future when Bruce sat down at his writing table at the Kingston Penitentiary.¹⁶³

Several people assisted me in researching and writing this article. My thanks and appreciation to historians Allen Seager, David Frank, Stephen Endicott, and Ian Angus, to Rae Murphy, the late son of Harvey Murphy, and Maryann Hiebert, Murphy’s daughter. Thanks also to Al Engler, Leola Jewett-Verzuh, L/LT editors Bryan Palmer and Greg Kealey, and the anonymous peer readers.

¹⁶³. Bruce died in 1967, Murphy ten years later. Bruce had long abandoned the CPC for the Trotskyist movement. Murphy also resigned from the CPC in the mid-1950s on advice that it would be better for the IWMSW to re-enter the House of Labour. Police spy reports suggest that he continued to meet his Toronto CPC club until near his death, RG 146, File A2010-00052, LAC.