

CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

David Akers is a Graduate Assistant in the School of Human Resource Management and Labour Relations at the Queensland University of Technology in Brisbane, Australia.

Denyse Baillargeon has completed her PhD at University of Montréal "Travail domestique et crise économique." She is currently a post-doctoral fellow at Carleton University.

Peter Campbell is an Adjunct Professor at Queen's University studying the early 20th century Canadian socialist movement.

David Crew teaches history at the University of Texas and is the author of Town in the Ruhr: A Social History of Rochum, 1860-1914.

Karen Dubinsky teaches at Brock University and her study of sexual pleasure and danger in rural and northern Ontario, 1880-1930, will be published by the University of Chicago Press.

David Frank teaches at the University of New Brunswick and editor of Acadiensis. He is currently writing a biography of J.B. McLachlan.

Noel Ignatiev is a doctoral candidate at Harvard in the History of American Civilization, working on a study provisionally titled "How the Irish Became White."

Mark Leier recently completed his Memorial University Ph.D. on the origins of trade union bureaucracy. He is teaching at Simon Fraser University.

John Manley teaches history and politics at Rowley Regis Sixth Form College, Sandwell, England. he is currently re-writing his Dalhousie doctoral thesis on the Workers' Unity League for publication.

Jeremy Mouat teaches history at Athabasca University, Athabasca, Alberta.

Bruce Spencer also teaches at Athabasca University.

Mariana Valverde teaches Sociology at York University. She is the author of The age of light, soap and water: moral reform in English Canada 1880s-1920 (1991); and is currently starting a major project comparing English and Ontario practices and ideas governing philanthropy and relief to urban paupers (1880-1914).